Dr. White Eagle, the Indian medicine man and showman who showed in this city last week, came very near having a serious runaway last Saturday. His team of fine Moroccan horses became frightened at the train and started to run. They made a sharp turn, throwing the doctor out and dragging him a short distance, but fortunately he was not hurt. His fourteen year old son who was in the buggy with him, managed to stay in some way, climbed out over the dash board, got hold of the lines and stopped them before they had run three hundred yards. But for the nerve and quick action of the boy the doctor would have probably been minus his buggy and team.

Grant, who attended a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Missouri Central Electric Railroad in New York last week, in an interview told a reporter of the Sun Monday, that the outlook for the immediate construction of the road was not so bright as painted in Thursday's Republic. We are not discouraged, he said, but the immediate construction of the road is out of the question and many important matters and details must be settled before the matter will be in shape, or the money can be procured for its construction.
